This course focuses on public opinion and political behavior. It is, particularly interested in the ways citizens' opinions and behaviors interact with institutions and practices of democratic regimes. Relying on comparative data from both democracies and non-democracies, some of the questions this course intends to answer are as follows: Do democratic regimes need better-informed and more competent citizens than other types of political regimes? Where do political opinions come from? How does public opinion influence policy-making in democracies? How do the policy-makers know about the public opinion? What are types of political participation in a digital age? How much citizens' side of politics does matter in an age of democratic backsliding and COVID-19?

The course is organized into two components. In the first component, we focus on the meaning and the relevance of public opinion in politics. Factors that motivate political opinion are also discussed in this component. Alternatively, in the second component, we question the ways different opinions translate into different political behaviors. Attitudinal and behavioral underpinnings of both conventional and unconventional political participation guide the discussions in this component.

Though the study of public opinion and political participation is a central theme in our discipline, it has become the more relevant with the advent of the recent populist wave of democratic backsliding. Further, the recent pandemic has influenced the context in which different types of democratic participation is discussed. In this ever-changing political and social contexts, the students are expected to actively follow the class materials and reflect on the current, significant political currents across the globe ☺.

Course book:

The instructor will send all class materials to the students via e-mail. The syllabus also provides information on on-line materials.

Academic Honesty and Plagiarism

Plagiarism is using the words or ideas of others and presenting them as your own. Plagiarism is a type of intellectual theft. It can take many forms, from deliberate cheating to accidentally copying from a source without acknowledgement. You will be subject to disciplinary action and punishment if you are caught plagiarizing.

Expectations & Requirements:

- 1) Attendance & Participation (5%): Attendance is COMPULSORY in this course. Students who miss more than 70% of the course fail the course automatically. Besides the attendance, the students are also expected to come to class prepared and actively participate in the weekly discussions.
- 2) Mid-term (30%): Students will have one mid-term exam throughout the semester, which constitutes 30% of the overall grade. Midterm will base on ALL the course material we cover until the exam date.
- 3) In-class quizzes (25%): We will dedicate one hour of our weekly classes to discuss course topics at length. For this purpose, we will utilize podcasts and Youtube videos besides the course materials. We will listen/watch the relevant discussion material within the class time and discuss it in relation with the weekly topic. At the end of the class, there will be an online quiz about the discussion material(s).

During the semester, there will be 6 quizzes. The average of these quizzes will count towards 25% of the class grade.
- 4) Final exam (40%): Students will have one final exam at the end of the semester, which makes 40% of your overall grade. The majority of the final exam questions base on the course material we cover after the midterm exam.

Expected Student Conduct in the Classroom

The expected student conduct in the classroom includes and not limited to:

- ✓ Coming to class on time and not leaving the class early without prior permission of the instructor.
- ✓ Focusing carefully on the course and avoiding engaging in not-class related activities such as checking e-mails from laptops/cell phones, reading not-class related materials such as newspapers and magazines, engaging in side conversations.
- ✓ Students are expected to behave mindful about the instructor as well as the fellow students while asking questions and making comments. They should request permission from the instructor before asking a question or making a comment. Also, they should respect other student's right to ask questions/make comments.
