This course examines the concept of “citizenship” both theoretically and empirically. The first part of the course focuses on the scope and relevance of the study of citizenship, and the historical development of citizenship theories. The course explores transformation that has occurred and continues to occur to perceptions, policies, and practices of citizenship as a result of global changes. The thinning of borders, the emergence of transnational communities, migration, globalization and technological advances all contribute to new understandings of what citizenship entails. We begin by studying citizenship theories rooted in debates on the relationship between the individual and the state, citizen rights and obligations, identity, community, and good and active citizenship. These theories seek answers to a range of normative questions such as who is a citizen, what makes a good citizen, should citizenship be active or passive, and what role does community play in defining citizenship?

The second objective of the course is to investigate theories of citizenship that have emerged as a result of changing global dynamics such as globalization, migration, the development of transnational communities, and technological advances. We explore universal versus differentiated perspectives on citizenship. We contest the conceptualization of citizenship as being bound by the nation state. Multicultural, cosmopolitan, transnational citizenship theories, among others, are studied. And most recently, the development of technology and the increased role of artificial intelligence and social media platforms necessitate a re-examination of the relationship between the state and the citizen, changes to spaces and forms in which citizenship is practiced, and potential changes to the role of the citizen. For each of these debates, we explore a range of empirical cases.

Academic Honesty and Plagiarism

Plagiarism is using the words or ideas of others and presenting them as your own. Plagiarism is a type of intellectual theft. It can take many forms, from deliberate cheating to accidentally copying from a source without acknowledgement. You will be subject to disciplinary action and punishment if you are caught plagiarizing.

Assessment Criteria:

- 1) Attendance and participation (10%): Attendance is mandatory in this course. Students are expected to come to class and actively participate in class discussions. You must attend 70% of classes or you will receive a grade of FX. If you will miss class, please let me know beforehand. If you miss an assignment or an exam due to illness you must present a valid doctor's report to request a make-up.
- 2) Midterm Exam (30%): The midterm exam will be on the topics covered until Week 8.
- 3) Country/Issue Report & Presentation (20%): Each student will select a country/issue to present on. If you choose to present on a country case, you will study the citizenship policies of the country and present on any key changes to citizenship policies in the past decade or so. You will evaluate the main challenges regarding citizenship in the country. If you choose to present on a particular issue/challenge that we have covered then you will research the impact and implications of the issue for citizenship. The assignment aims to familiarize the class with a range of different country cases and empirical examples. A more detailed guideline will be distributed with suggestions for research topics. You will submit a written report of findings and present them in class. Presentations will begin Week 6 and continue through Week 13.
- 4) Final Exam (40%): The final exam will be based on all the material covered in class.

*If you miss an exam please ensure that you have a valid reason/report in order to request to take a make-up exam. You may access the Directive on Make-Up Exams at the following link:
